Short-term office building

As general contractor, Blumer Lehmann planned, manufactured and installed an entire three-storey temporary office building for the Lausanne transport authority in just a few short months.

The office building covers a total of 875 m² gross floor area and is equipped with everything that an administrative building needs: nine office spaces ranging in size from 10 to 63 m², a conference room with a floor space of 31 m², a smaller meeting room and a telephone room, a reception area, sanitary facilities, building services and cleaning rooms and even a large canteen are all housed in the building.

The three storeys were constructed in a modular design with a steel substructure serving as a foundation. A combination of air-to-water heat pump, multi-split air conditioning system and a roof covered end-to-end in photovoltaic panels supplies the building with sustainable energy.

Two years after completion, the office building was given a new facade of dark-grey solid core Duropal panels with a black core.

This is how inspiring a temporary office building can be: interiors with a vibrant colour scheme.

The dark, understated facade helps this modular construction stand out.

The light and airy office space is brightened even more with a sunny choice of colour

The geometric visuals of the building's facade is accentuated by the many windows.

Well equipped: there is even a small kitchen in the temporary office building.

Stylish yet functional: the stairwell in blue.

The photovoltaic system on the roof of the temporary office building supplies it with energy.
